WEBSTER'S

Seven Have Been Accepted for the Bookmaker's Trial.

Tragedy at Hand.

The Brother of the Slain Broker Arrives This Morning.

The work of selecting a jury for the trial of Bookmaker Burton C. Webster for the kill-ing of Broker Charles E. Goodwin, was continued before Justice Ingraham in the Court of Oyer and Terminer this morning.

There were already five jurors in the box and it was stated that Justice Ingraham, being determined that this trial should not outlast the week, would sit till midnight, if necessary, to complete the jury of citizens that must decide between Webster and the people.

On the former trial of Webster three days were consumed in getting a jury and six days were consumed in examining witnesses. The result was a disagreement, the jury

He will be upported by Messra. Stapler and McIntyre. Arthur H. Goodwin, the younger brother of Charles E. Goodwin, and who was with him down to within an hour of the moment when Webster emptied his pistol into Charles E. this morning. Goodwin's abdomen in his own apartment in the Percival flats on Aug. 2, 1891, arrived from his home in Minneapolis this morning. Nelson B. Record, of Chicago, who contradicted the story of Evelyn Granville, the "common law wife" of Webster, about the insults alleged by her to have been offered her by Goodwin on a certain occasion, also rrived to-day.

Fanny Romaine, the old serving woman and Webster's best witness, has recovered in a Brooklyn hospital, and will appear, and willisten MacGarlane, the lanitor, another witness for the defense, has returned from Europe, so that all of the parties to the tragedy are at hand.

Among the citizens examined to-day as to his qualification for duty as a juror in the trial was Ben'amin H. Waterman, of 161 East Sixty-lith street, who was one of the jury that convicted Ben All, or "Frenchy," the Assyrian Arab charged with the butchery of Mary Brown, or "Old Shakespeare." Mr. Waterman was excused.

Webster, in a modest suit of dark blue, was cool and calm as always since his arrest. He has implicit confidence in his lawyer, William Nelson B. Record, of Chicago, who contra

The jurors already accepted are:

1. Sames O'Kane, builder, 314 West One Hundred and Thirty-third street and 201 Alexander avenue.

2. Richard Oettel, clerk at 17 Warren street; 305 East Seventy-fourth street.

3. Richard R. Goodrich, tea merchant at 43 Harrison street; 110 West One Hundred and Fourth street.

4. James Haisted, dry.goods man at 527 West One Hundred and Twenty-ninth and 311 West One Hundred and Thirtleth street.

5. Patrick J. Tiernan, contractor, 431 East One Hundred and Twenty-first street.

6. John Lucas, hardware, at 467 Amsterdam Avenue, 185 West Righty-second Street.

7. Bealanin Keller, millinery, 491 Righth avenue and 301 West Thirty-fourth street.

A Beautiful Girl Tells Queer Stories in Poughkeepsie.

Detectives Sent to Discover if She Is the Jersey City Helress.

Citizens of Dutchess County, according to a lespatch from Poughkeepsie, are greatly puzzled by the strange actions of a beautiful and accomplished young woman who is said All the Witnesses in the Percival to have registered at the Nelson House, in that city, a week ago as Miss A. Plunkett, saving she was the daughter of a French dip lomat, and was going to attend Vassar Col lege.

The day after registering thus she is reported to have dropped out of sight until yes-terday, when it was learned that she had been at the home of Charles Jackson, a tarmer, whose post-office address is Clinton Corner, twenty miles from Poughkeepsie, and had there given her name as Anna Schalkhausser and had said her father was to represent France at the World's Fair. The Poughkeepsie despatch also said that the mysterious girl had engaged board at a private house in that city and had stated there that she had four brothers at Harvard College and an uncle who was interested in the Mercantile Safe Deposit Company of New

The whole story was made interesting by reason of the girl's beauty and accomplish-ments, which were reported to have been so striking as to attract notice even among the striking as to attract notice even among the folk who have Vassar girls with them always.

The report gave no clue to the girl's identity, but it was learned to-day by an Evening World reporter that the fair stranger is supposed to be the daughter o' Mrs. I. D. Schalk-hausser, of 234 Second street, Jersey City.

Mrs. Schalkhausser is weatthy, and the first thing she did this morning was to instruct Attorney John Bacot to send a detective to Poughteepsie to learn if Miss Anna was the girl who had acted in the manner reported.

"Anna went away a month ago with a daughter of Evelyn Apsel, who is the daughter of a New York Episcopalian clergyman, to spend a month in the country, twenty miles from Poughkeepsie, "said Mrs. Schalkhausser." I have received letters from her and have sent money to her at Clinton Corner, and I think the girls are stopping at the house of a man named Jackson.

"Anna is a good girl, has been educated in Paris, and I don't believe she has done the things reported. She is seventeen years old. She has no brothers and no uncle in the Mercantile Sate Deposit Company. That Frence diplomat and World's Fair stuff is all nonsense, so far as she is concerned, and I don't believe she said it.

"She has some friends at Vassar and may be they have been cutting up 8-one pranks, and 10 ks might have taken what they said in earnest."

The coaches piled one over the other until the buggage and express cars were completely hidden from view. The three Pulliman sleepers remained remained on the track, but the other cars were completely demoished.

Men. women and children were piled over each other, caught in the seats and inrown through the windows of the car. Relief first reached the train from Emporta.

An examination of the track showed that the fishplates had been carefully removed, the boilts taken out and the spikes drawn from ten ties and a rail removed.

The train was carrying $1,000,000 Mexican Central money.

An inquest will be held next Tuesday, when the origin of the fire which destroyed the Seaside Hotel a week ago yesterday will also be investigated.

Shortly after the remains of Mrs. Phillips were removed from the ruins, Adolph Mock, the woman's son-in-law, came to the sput where the charred bones were found. He was a strong man, but he was in a state verging upon hysteria.

It was hoped until the charred bones were found that Mrs. Phillips had not been burned, but had been lost in the crowd last night.

When the remains were found this morning the cries and walls of the woman's six children were heartrending.
